DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This 2½ story high, three bay wide house stands at the end of a row in the middle of the block. Built of brick laid in common bond, the building is one room deep with a half gabled, or forward sloping shed roof. All wall openings are boarded or filled with concrete.

The building stands on a brick basement, pierced with a rectangular window in the central bay. To the right, the stoop at the entrance has been removed. On the front facade the base is covered with stucco, obscuring the lines of a possible brick water table beneath.

First and second floor window openings have flat splayed brick lintels and brick sills. The square attic windows have running brick lintels and brick sills. A brick cornice runs at the roofline. A squat rectangular brick chimney rises from the exposed eastern wall. Disturbed brickwork of the side wall at the attic level suggest that the side wall has been altered.

A two bay wide, three bay deep, two story high back extension runs from the left side of the rear of the building. The shed roof slopes down from the peak at the left, and runs perpendicular to the peak of the main roof. A low fieldstone wall runs back from the exposed eastern side wall of the main building. Just to the east of this, behind the houses fronting Leadenhall Street, a sunken, circular, water filled depression was possibly a well or privy.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This structure is presumably the oldest in Sharp Leadenhall and is intimately linked to the succession of brickmakers who were the early developers of Sharp-Leadenhall.

Doubtful

Built on land which was owned by John Mc[redacted] until his death in 1811, the land east on Leadenhall Street was built by 1814. In that year Frederick Sumwalt, who was variously a blacksmith, a stone quarrier, a bricklayer, a brick maker, and superintendent of Baltimore's streets, bought the property and several lots to the south. A building is shown on this site on the 1822 Poppleton Map.

The structure was originally a two story half house with a high basement and possibly a water table. A stout, rectangular brick chimney rises from the side wall revealing brick which has been added at the attic level. A low fieldstone wall and a well or privy in the back yard are early features. A substantial, three bay wide structure, it probably set the local precedent for the row of half houses across Montgomery Street.
